Here's why it's important for adult men to prioritize friendships.

Women of all ages often rely on their female friends for support and companionship, even when they are in a committed relationship with

- Find people with similar interests. Consider joining a group or team based on what you like to do. You're more likely to find people with similar interests and it may be easier to connect with others in this environment.

answering personal questions, open up and share your own vulnerabilities.

- Spend time together. If you don't feel comfortable asking a new friend to grab a drink or meal, find other activities where you can still have fun and get to know one another. Go to the gym, watch a ball game or volunteer together.
- Nurture friendships. Being a friend takes work, especially if you're in the early stages of a friendship. Make time to check in, get together and be there for friends when they need you.
- Aim for quality over quantity. You don't need a lot of friends. It's more important to have a few quality people you can count on for emotional support, companionship and connection.

Bottom line: finding friends and nurturing relationships is good for you!
With summer upon us, now might be a good time to reach out and start or re-start a mutually beneficial friendship.
